THE ULI GERALD D. HINES STUDENT URBAN DESIGN COMPETITION 2007

THE FINAL FOUR: University of California at Berkeley, University of Illinois at Urbana Champaign, Harvard University, and Harvard University

---

You are invited to a presentation by graduate student design and development teams from the University of California at Berkeley, the University of Illinois at Urbana Champaign, Harvard University, and Harvard University as they face off in the fifth annual ULI Gerald D. Hines Urban Design Competition to win the $50,000 first prize.

These student teams competed with 89 other teams from universities across the United States and Canada and made the final four in a multidisciplinary urban design competition that proposed development schemes for the East First Street corridor in downtown Los Angeles. Student teams proposed the next steps in the planning, design, and development of this site.

Now the four student teams will present their enhanced schemes to the competition jury and an invited audience. Please join us for the presentations.

Friday, 30 March 2007

8:30 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. Team Presentations
12:45 p.m. to 2:00 p.m. Break for Lunch
2:00 p.m. Announcement of Winner

Location: Japanese American National Museum
Aratani Central Hall
369 East First Street

The ULI Gerald D. Hines Urban Design Competition is part of the Institute's ongoing effort to raise interest among young people in improving development patterns and increasing awareness of the need for multi-disciplinary solutions to development and design challenges. This competition is intended to generate creative solutions, but there is neither guarantee nor intent that any submitted scheme will be applied to the site.
